FOREWORD

The exhibits displayed are practically self-expression. The children with Cizek are confronted with raw materials in lavish variety. They attend to their work freely on Saturday and Sunday only. They represent average types, of all ages, from all classes of people. No selection is made, and in the time of their gathering in the classroom no instruction whatever is given. The child develops himself and enjoys the Master's presence only. Encouragement they get for art as life or life as art, but never for art as a profession. They come and leave as they were born and will die some day. In between they have a good time, are busy playing, singing, dancing. Light and sound breathe for a while among them, humorously talked of by the friendly man.

Mr. Hanns C. Kollar, of Vienna, Austria, Representative of Professor Franz Cizek, in charge of the Exhibition

Miss Dorothy North, of Chicago, Assistant in charge of Reproductions

NOTICE

The Frank Cizek work was munificently supported from its foundation in 1898 by the Board of Education of the Austrian Government.

When the aftermath of the war raged, initiative of lovers entered savingly and with donations brought encouragement to teacher and pupils. The work went abroad and became internationally known. Returns from reproductions and collection boxes were devoted to the upkeep of the school, the strengthening of the Save the Children Fund and the maintenance of a hospital for tubercular children in Austria. Recently they have included the Confederation Internationale des Etudiants through the National Union of Students in London, even to one-fourth of the profits.

If the finances of the exhibition prosper as heretofore, the Master shall for the rest of his life have secured a place where he may amplify to the full his plans for developing the creative faculties of children.

In these days Professor Cizek is completing a monumental book. He will show in its pages and colored plates the way he has gone, truly trustfully living his in the children's life. No cool methodical advice and elaborate technical scheme will appear to nail down another educational progress, resulting in the foundation of "Cizek Schools," but an approach in simplicity and humility to the Creative Motor.

For the issue of this document as a gift to the world the American success of the exhibition will make a solid contribution.

Let's have and give a chance,—methinks it was never more the case.
